

The Young Greek Australian HERMES

Volume I Issue 11 02/05/2010

The current economic and political situation that Greece is struggling through is not something that happened overnight. In fact, it is not even a situation that was forced upon Greece with the introduction of the “Euro Zone”. It is, although not directly, a continuation of problems that has plagued Greece since before the Junta.

The economic framework set in place in the homeland is horribly inefficient, full of loopholes and confusing for even those schooled in economics and commerce; and has been for some time. In the meantime over the last 30 years, developed nations have been promoting economic ideas such as efficiency, productivity, privatisation and streamlining of both political and economic entities. This culture of economic streamlining has led to the prosperity and success that we, as Greek-Australians, enjoy every day in Australia.

The key question now is how Greece can turn itself around and once again become a prosperous haven for all Greeks. And that is where we, as Greeks who are both schooled and lived in a culture of prosperity, must come to the aid of the homeland. With political motives blocking the right decisions that need to be made, Greece’s only hope is that people with a love for the nation but an objective view will come to its aid. Donating funds is a start, but helping a push for change in any way is the best way any person who identifies themselves as a Greek living abroad can help a county in need.
